Excerpts from the Speech of His Majesty King Abdullah II During the UN Security Council Session on Threats to Global Peace and Security Caused by Terrorist Acts (September 24, 2014)

There are three important principles that we must bear in mind as we embark on our mission:

First: Global communication and commitment, as the threat is not confined to Syria and Iraq alone, but also exists in Sinai, Libya, Yemen, Mali, the Horn of Africa, and elsewhere. This is not just an Arab or Islamic battle, because the danger touches the countries represented in this Council and all others. It is the war of our era, and success in it requires a unified effort backed by robust resources.

Success also requires a holistic approach; cross-border terrorism thrives on crises, injustice, and sectarian conflict. Winning hearts and minds requires a strong stance against marginalization, poverty, and exclusion. Parallel to security measures, there must be diplomatic, developmental, job creation, educational, and other efforts.

Second Main Principle: Taking immediate action. The new generation of extremism practices recruitment all over the world through social media and covert partnerships. The more they control resource-rich territories, the more capable they become of sustaining themselves. Time is of the essence in this matter. We have already begun work, and what is required of this coalition now is continuation and perseverance until all its goals are achieved.

Third Condition: Transparency, as these groups rely for their survival on international deals and support. Mr. President, a zero-tolerance policy must be applied to any country, organization, or individual that facilitates, supports, or funds terrorist groups, supplies them with weapons, or promotes them, whether through media outlets or through exploiting clerics to incite or assist in recruiting fighters into these terrorist groups. Absolute compliance is mandatory, and we do not accept that a country complies in one aspect while wreaking havoc in another.

Excerpts from the Speech of Crown Prince Al Hussein bin Abdullah II Before the UN General Assembly (September 22, 2017)

We the youth, like the generations before us, carry a legacy of wisdom and shared values left by our ancestors. And like those before us, we must strive to reconcile what we inherited with the reality we live in today, which is an unprecedented reality.

Our world today stands at a crucial crossroads, resulting from the convergence of deep-rooted globalization with technological innovations that are causing profound change. The world also stands on the threshold of a Fourth Industrial Revolution that is redefining how our societies operate and how we interact with one another as human beings. In our highly interconnected world thanks to technology, people are drawing closer together while growing further apart at the same time.

Amidst all this, young men and women of my generation ask: What are the values that anchor global citizenship today? In which direction is our moral compass pointing? Will it guide us to justice, prosperity, and peace for all ?

Young men and women of my generation are often described as dreamers, but we all know that every great deed begins as a dream. Our efforts are often minimized and described as seeking idealism, but the pursuit of idealism is not a form of naivety; rather, it is boldness and courage itself. It sharpens our resolve so that we elevate our reality toward our ideals, and so that we do not compromise or back down from our principles during adversity.

Enhancing Community Security and Peace

from Vision to Empowerment

In the journey of public work, there are pivotal milestones that are not merely administrative or organizational achievements, but a living embodiment of a firm will and a clear vision aimed at building a safe and fortified society. The inauguration of the Community Peace Center, under the gracious patronage of His Excellency the Director of Public Security, Major General Dr. Obeidallah Al-Maaytah, represents the culmination of painstaking efforts and a launching point for a new phase of field and intellectual work.

We cannot fail in this regard to highly value the fruitful strategic partnership with the German Federal Foreign Office, represented by the Bavarian State Police, which provided fundamental and appreciated support in establishing and equipping this Center. This international cooperation embodies our shared belief in the importance of enhancing community peace, serving as a model for developmental partnerships that supply our national efforts with international expertise contributing to achieving our goals aimed at consolidating the values of cohesion and moderation.

The honor of His Excellency Major General Dr. Obeidallah Al-Maaytah gracing this inauguration was not merely a protocol procedure; rather, it was institutional support reflecting the deep partnership between security agencies and community institutions. Through our new headquarters, we are not only opening doors to offices, but opening spaces for dialogue, laboratories for ideas, and platforms for training and awareness.

The presence of this Center means that we have become closer to the citizen, and more capable of monitoring and confronting challenges using modern and scientific tools, so that the Center becomes an incubator for all national initiatives aimed at consolidating the values of tolerance, moderation, and the rule of law.
This achievement places a doubled responsibility on our shoulders; the support we received dictates that we live up to expectations, and that we translate this patronage and partnership into tangible programs that touch people›s lives and protect our social fabric from fragmentation attempts. Today, we are more determined and firmer in our belief that the future is built through awareness, hard work, and national solidarity behind our Hashemite leadership and institutions.

In conclusion, we renew our pledge that this Center will remain a beacon of awareness, a fortress for peace, and a house of expertise for everyone seeking to serve this dear homeland.

Community Peace Center

A National Institutional Model for Protecting Society and Enhancing Its Resilience and Stability

Over twenty-seven years of his reign, His Majesty King Abdullah II ibn Al Hussein has established firm principles in safe guarding human dignity and protecting rights, embodying and continuing the steady approach of the Hashemite leadership across long decades of the Jordanian state's existence in moderation, balance, and tolerance.

His Majesty's visions and continuous directives to immunize citizens against the negative effects of extremism and hate speech, and to enhance community security against the dangers of radicalism, formed a governing foundation for building a national institutional model that fulfills its responsibilities and roles in protecting society and enhancing its resilience and stability, through His Majesty›s school of confronting ideology with ideology.

As an early response to the Royal visions, the Community Peace Center in the Public Security Directorate represents an advanced institutional model in addressing deviation and negative behaviors, raising awareness of their harmful repercussions within a preventative approach and effective proactive measures. These measures include employing all capabilities to achieve a safe community environment free from extremism and violence.

The expansion of the Center›s services and programs to cover all parts of the Kingdom comes as a reflection of the spirit of national and security responsibility in ensuring access to all social groups, including children and youth, This deepens citizens› trust in the efficiency and professionalism of the security agencies and appreciates the role of those watching over the nation's security and stability.

and non-official institutions in facing challenges and variables imposed by technological transformations, the spread of social media, and the widespread uses of artificial intelligence media, the efforts undertaken by the Center in awareness, capacity building, and community immunization represented a foundation for establishing cooperation between the Ministry of Social Development and the Center in expanding awareness programs and reaching groups most in need of protection and awareness.

Therefore, the Ministry of Social Development continues its efforts, within the framework of the Memorandum of Understanding signed with the Center, to implement awareness and training programs in care homes and local community development centers targeting children, juveniles, and workers. The goal is to enhance values of dialogue, belonging, and tolerance, prevent extremism and digital recruitment, and rationalize social media use, while reaffirming the Ministry›s appreciation for the great efforts made by the Community Peace Center and its leadership in serving the nation and society.

The Ministry also plays a pivotal role in caring for and rehabilitating juveniles in conflict with the law according to a reformative approach consistent with principles stressed by His Majesty regarding respect for human rights, offering opportunities for reform and reintegration. The Ministry provides a safe educational environment, along with educational, vocational, psychological, and social programs that help juveniles build their personalities and return to society as good, productive individuals. This is done alongside engaging the family in the rehabilitation process and implementing post-care programs contributing to reducing recidivism, in cooperation with the judicial authority, the Public Security Directorate, educational institutions, and civil society organizations.

The Ministry further continues its role in responding to crises and disasters by offering social and psychological support to affected groups, enhancing society›s resilience, mitigating the social impacts of crises, and cementing the concept of national solidarity, which His Majesty has always emphasized as one of the most important elements of the Jordanian state›s strength.

The Ministry of Social Development believes that Royal visions represent the roadmap for building a cohesive, safe society built on social justice, the rule of law, respect for human dignity, and the promotion of values of dialogue, tolerance, and good citizenship. Social protection programs, economic empowerment, juvenile care, family support, civil society empowerment, and partnership with national institutions all constitute an integrated system to consolidate community peace, achieve sustainable development, and enhance Jordan›s security and stability under the wise Hashemite leadership.

The Fence of Awareness and Human Development

The Community Peace Center as a Pillar of Sustainable Security

The Public Security Directorate continues to consolidate a comprehensive security and cultural approach based on safeguarding human dignity and protecting society from intellectual and behavioral threats. We recall with pride the journey of «the Community Peace Center» whose first nucleus was launched in 2015 as a conscious proactive step in confronting extremist ideology.

Today, we translate the wise Royal vision of His Majesty King Abdullah II ibn Al Hussein—may God protect and preserve him—in creating a safe, prosperous society free from extremism and terrorism, by opening the Center›s new headquarters in 2026. This opening came as the fruit of distinguished international cooperation with friends in the Bavarian Police in Germany, reflecting the depth of Jordan's strategic partnerships in facing cross-border challenges.

This Center is not merely a physical structure, but an integrated intellectual and operational beacon dedicated to immunizing society against deviant ideology and dismantling hate speech that seeks to divide ranks and spread poison across digital and real-world spaces.

We at the Public Security Directorate believe that fighting terrorism is not limited to field security efforts alone, but begins with drying up the sources of dark ideology and promoting values of tolerance, moderation, and acceptance of the other.

The Center will continue, through its qualified personnel and by building partnerships with various official, civil, and youth institutions, to provide awareness and guidance programs that raise the level of community awareness, making every citizen a key partner in the security framework and the defense of our authentic Jordanian values.

May God preserve Jordan as an impregnable fortress against extremism and an oasis of security and safety under the banner of the Dean of the Noble House of the Prophet, His Majesty King Abdullah II ibn Al Hussein.

The Community Peace Center

A Decade-Long Journey of Giving

In 2015, since the "Community Peace Center" began its work under the umbrella of the Directorate, a different security vision was born based on a deep belief that true security is not limited to firm force alone, but begins first with immunizing minds and building an aware, cohesive society. This step was not merely a passing initiative in traditional security records, but represented a qualitative strategic shift toward the concept of "soft intellectual security" and intellectual and social prevention that protects the social fabric from within and anticipates danger by addressing its roots before they grow.

Over more than a decade, specifically in the journey extending to 2026, the Community Peace Center took steady, deliberate steps that altered the landscape of security awareness in Jordan.
The Center bypassed traditional methods and routine lectures to outline a smart, participatory path bringing together youth, education, media, and civil society institutions under one interactive umbrella.

The Center's efforts throughout this rich journey focused on formulating an integrated preventive system operating simultaneously on multiple fronts. In virtual space, the Center was active in digital intellectual immunization aimed at protecting young people from online attraction networks and digital recruitment risks targeting their minds. Concurrent with this digital activity, efforts were directed toward the depths of society to secure family stability by empowering Jordanian families and raising their awareness about methods of preventing crime, behavioral deviation, and hate speech, given that the family is the cornerstone of any safe society.
This security chain was only completed through persistent efforts to reject hatred, as the Center worked on spreading a culture of balanced dialogue and acceptance of the other, while confronting rumors and negative phenomena that disturb civil peace.

The tangible success achieved by Jordan in this pioneering file places a major responsibility on the Center today that transcends geographical borders toward global horizons. The aspiration for the upcoming phase is embodied in the diligent pursuit of transferring this unique Jordanian experience in intellectual to international forums, and building cross-continental strategic partnerships with UN organizations and global research centers, making the Community Peace Center a regional and international reference to be emulated in setting strategies for preventing extremism.

Ultimately, community peace remains a shared responsibility and an interactive environment created every day by citizens and security personnel together, so that this nation remains an impregnable fortress safeguarding its resources and protecting its future generations.

Community Peace and Its Importance in Strengthening the National Fabric and Countering Extremist Ideology

Prof. Dr.
Malik Ahmad Al-Sharairi
Dean of Yarmouk University

The issue of countering extremist ideology is one of the top priorities that occupied wide spaces in Jordan's interests under the leadership of His Majesty the King and His Royal Highness Crown Prince Al Hussein. On more than one occasion, His Majesty called on the international community to take action and work with sincere dedication to eradicate terrorism and expose misguided takfiri ideology across multiple fronts, revealing its deviation from the methodology of religion and Islamic Sharia rules. His Majesty stressed that we are required to exert all efforts and establish comprehensive solutions to combat the problems and challenges facing the Islamic nation. From here, working to establish values of balance and moderation and combating extremism and takfir has been a firm Jordanian approach based on a comprehensive Hashemite vision aimed at immunizing minds, especially youth, from everything that could pose a threat to their lives.

For the reasons above, community peace is considered a fundamental pillar of solid construction in cohesive Jordanian society, and plays an advanced role in supporting efforts to achieve sustainable development and social justice. The message of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan in achieving community peace relies on firm constants of authentic Arab values and Islamic Sharia. It aims to build an interconnected society proud of its national identity and rejecting all forms of extremism, thereby enhancing values of tolerance and coexistence within its diverse social fabric. This reinforces ties of love among people regardless of their colors, religious beliefs, or intellectual affiliations, emphasizing coexistence, acceptance of the other, and promoting values of tolerance, love, and rational, objective, constructive dialogue.

The Community Peace Center of the Public Security Directorate performs clear efforts aimed at achieving harmony, peace, security, and stability in society within practical programs, sustainable initiatives, and creative ideas confronting hate speech and curbing the spread of violence, which has become a phenomenon driven by social media platforms and various technical programs. The Center's plans and programs are characterized by comprehensiveness and horizontal reach extending to various regions of the Kingdom. I quote here from His Majesty King Abdullah II's speech at the "Cohesive Societies" conference held in Singapore in June 2019: "Extremists have been able to exploit modern means of communication in the world to plot, recruit, arm, and spread their dark ideas. That is why we must exert more efforts in confronting them."

The Community Peace Center fulfills its mission through an elite group of Public Security personnel armed with a responsible national sense, alertness, intelligence, and knowledge that qualifies them to perform their mission of working to immunize our sons and daughters against advocates of destructive, dark ideas and their attempts to influence youth's minds and deviate them from the path of truth, correctness, and authentic Arab and Islamic values. These personnel know that the trust placed in them is heavy because they are in continuous confrontation with advocates of a hatred-filled ideology against every noble value in society. Therefore, what inspires pride is that behind every achievement are eyes that believed in the homeland and complied with His Majesty's visions in creating a strategy that addresses youth minds with enlightened thought across numerous curricula and programs to be deeper in enhancing high national values, national belonging, and instilling concepts of loyalty and belonging to the homeland and its Hashemite leadership.

Jordan, under the leadership of His Majesty King Abdullah II and His Royal Highness Crown Prince Al Hussein, was and remains strongly present and influential in confronting those who call for hatred in the name of Islam to distort the legacy of our great religion and its teachings. Whether hate speech and violence stem from khawarij (outlaws) of Islam or from extremists fueling hatred against Islam, it constitutes—according to His Majesty's vision—a danger and threat to all humanity. In memory, and within the framework of continuing international efforts to combat terrorism and extremism in all its forms, His Majesty participated in the "Christchurch Call" summit on May 14, 2021, to counter online extremism and hate speech, where he clearly noted that the lack of justice and absence of a political horizon fuel the fires of extremism, as terrorists exploit feelings of grievance to gain supporters. He also noted in his speech that attacks on interfaith harmony, mutual respect, and trust represent the greatest threat facing the world, requiring everyone to confront it and resist hatred and exclusion.

At Yarmouk University, we believe in effective partnership with various societal institutions, and we are bound to the Public Security Directorate by a close cooperation agreement that serves as an example of translating the vision of His Majesty the King and the Crown Prince in confronting these complex, constantly evolving dangers. Since the responsibility of confronting extremist ideology falls on various societal institutions—starting from the family, extending to educational, media, religious, cultural, and intellectual institutions—and since university education is a key element in the integrated set of elements contributing to confronting extremist ideology, our institutional values and convictions have been based on the fact that confronting this danger requires a studied, holistic approach. This implies the necessity of investing in comprehensive and sustainable development so that all people, especially youth, can benefit from opportunities.

It also means the necessity of fighting the war of ideas to confront ideologies calling for division and hatred. Reaffirming this, directives have continuously stressed holding activities, events, seminars, and dialogues centered on a single goal: building a generation with strong awareness, sound mind, balanced thought, capable of distinguishing between truth and falsehood, between correct religiosity and deviant extremism, and possessing the ability to confront destructive and extremist ideas.

Mohammad Ismail Al-Widyan
Dean of Amman Arab University

Universitie Where Community Peace Begins

Building the Human Being Is the Most Important Investment in the Nation's Security and Stability

When terms like security or peace are mentioned, minds usually turn to maintaining order, applying the law, protecting lives and property, and the absence of violence in its various forms. However, experience has proven that true security and peace begin much earlier; they begin with building the human being, instilling values, and raising generations that believe difference does not justify hostility, diversity is a source of strength, and respect for the law is a self-responsibility before being a legal obligation. Hence, community peace is not merely a state of conflict absence, but a deep-rooted culture built in minds before being protected by procedures.

In this context, universities transcend their traditional role as degree-granting institutions to become national institutions that build awareness, shape character, and qualify a generation capable of critical thinking, responsible dialogue, openness to the other, and pride in national identity. A university does not merely graduate a doctor, engineer, teacher, or lawyer, but contributes to shaping the citizen who will lead state institutions, influence society, and bear the responsibility of maintaining the nation's security and stability.

Because human beings in general constitute the most precious thing we own according to the immortal saying of His late Majesty King Hussein—may God rest his soul—and because youth represent the most precious national wealth, universities are considered the most influential environment in shaping their intellectual and behavioral attitudes. Within their halls, national identity takes shape, and values of good citizenship, belonging, justice, tolerance, and respect for law take root. Their environment forms fertile ground for knowing the other by virtue of harboring students from diverse cultures, enhancing diversity and granting valuable opportunities for accepting the other. These values are not instilled by lectures alone, but built through a fair university environment that allows dialogue, respects diversity, encourages participation, and gives students the opportunity to express their opinions within a framework of responsibility and mutual respect.

Community peace is not achieved by the absence of difference, but by managing it well. The university is the space where young people learn how to differ without hostility, dialogue without exclusion, compete without fanaticism, and unite on national constants despite the diversity of their opinions and backgrounds. When a university succeeds in consolidating this culture, it contributes to graduating future leaders who possess the ability to manage institutions and society in a spirit of consensus and partnership, realizing that society's strength lies in its unity, not in the similarity of its individuals.

Amid the digital revolution and unprecedented openness to cyberspace, societies face new challenges that cross traditional borders, most notably the spread of rumors, hate speech, media disinformation, and intellectual recruitment attempts.

These challenges target youth in particular, which doubles the responsibility of universities in building digital awareness, enhancing critical thinking, developing the ability to verify information, and consolidating the responsible use of modern technologies and artificial intelligence.

A student who possesses tools of analysis and criticism is less vulnerable to being dragged behind disinformation, and more capable of contributing to protecting society from division.

Here, reference must be made to His Majesty King Abdullah II's article "Social Media Platforms or Social Strife?", in which His Majesty warned against the negative use of social media, emphasizing the need to protect the social fabric from hate speech and cyberbullying, and calling for respect for the other.

The role of universities is not limited to education, but extends to scientific research, which represents one of the most important tools for forecasting the future and addressing societal issues.

Through scientific studies, it is possible to understand the causes of violence, analyze manifestations of extremism, monitor social transformations, poverty, and social discrimination, and propose evidence-based practical solutions.
This enhances the ability of state institutions to adopt preventive policies addressing causes before results, building security on knowledge rather than reactions.

The Community Peace Center under , whose new building was recently opened by His Excellency Director of Public Security Major General Dr. Obeidallah Al-Maaytah, is a modern center with which universities can cooperate and leverage available resources to reach the best results in this regard.
Furthermore, universities are no longer closed institutions within their walls, but active partners in community service. Volunteer work, student initiatives, innovation incubators, entrepreneurship centers, and projects responding to community needs all contribute to instilling values of responsibility, belonging, and teamwork.

A student participating in community service during study years gains a deeper sense of responsibility toward the nation, becoming more convinced that development and security are a shared responsibility.

In Jordan, under its wise Hashemite leadership, investing in human beings constitutes the core pillar of the political, economic, and administrative modernization drive.

Therefore, universities today are required to be active partners in achieving these national visions by preparing graduates who combine academic excellence with intellectual maturity, professional competence with ethical commitment, and global openness with pride in national identity. Building the human being is the foundation upon which development is constructed, and is the real fence protecting society from destructive ideas, enhancing its ability to face variables with confidence and responsibility.

Building community peace is not achieved by procedures alone, but begins with creating conviction. Every extremist idea is defeated by enlightened thought, every rumor is confronted with a critical mind, and every tendency toward fanaticism is treated with a culture of dialogue and openness. Hence, the university becomes the first intellectual line of defense, not because it owns classrooms, but because it possesses the ability to shape minds before stances, and create awareness before decision-making. When a young person is convinced of the value of law, respects diversity, and realizes that difference does not ruin belonging, society wins a citizen who protects the homeland with thought before any other means.

The future of nations is not made by towering buildings or advanced technology alone, but by the conscious human being who believes in the homeland, respects the law, makes dialogue an approach, responsibility a behavior, and belonging a daily action. This human being is the greatest gift a university can give to its country.
Every classroom where minds are built, every idea instilling values of moderation, and every initiative developing the spirit of giving represents a new step toward a more cohesive and safe society.
When the university becomes a factory for awareness as much as a beacon for science, it does not merely graduate specialists, but graduate's guardians of community peace, partners in protecting the homeland, and makers of a future worthy of Jordan, which made human beings its most precious resource, and moderation and coexistence the pillar of its renaissance and stability.

From Gaming to Protection

How Do We Protect Our Children in Electronic Gaming Spaces ?

Electronic games are no longer merely a means of entertainment or spending free time; today they have become one of the most prominent social spaces where children and adolescents interact. In these digital spaces, they learn, communicate, form relationships and friendships, and experience concepts of competition and belonging. As in any social environment, these digital spaces carry significant opportunities alongside challenges and risks that require shared awareness and collective responsibility to ensure a safe and positive digital experience for children. During recent years, a set of risks that children may face while using electronic gaming platforms has increasingly emerged, including cyberbullying, harassment, grooming, unsafe communication with strangers, and exposure to violent or inappropriate content. Consequently, digital safety is no longer just a technical issue or a responsibility falling on families alone; it has become an essential part of the child protection system and a societal priority linked to providing safe, supportive environments for children's growth and well-being.

While taking these challenges seriously is important, building effective responses requires moving beyond general perceptions and unevidenced fears, relying instead on a deep understanding of the digital reality children live in, and listening to their actual experiences and needs.

Based on the commitment of Generations For Peace, through the Generations For Peace Institute, to supporting safe communities and promoting a culture of peace in digital environments, we conducted a research study titled "From Play to Danger." It relied on a participatory methodology involving interviews and discussions with children, parents, experts, and representatives from security agencies and child protection institutions. The study revealed key results and facts forming a knowledge base that can be built upon to develop more effective and comprehensive national responses to protect children and enhance their safety in the digital world.

The study results showed that many forms of abuse within electronic gaming environments have unfortunately become part of the daily experience for some children, to the extent that some no longer view them as behaviors requiring intervention or reporting. When exposed to abusive situations, many tend to use tools like muting sound, leaving the game, or ignoring the situation instead of seeking support or resorting to available reporting channels, indicating a need to raise awareness of protection mechanisms and build trust in these channels.

The study also revealed that the nature of digital risks children face varies according to gender; it showed that girls are more vulnerable to harassment and sexualized nagging, while boys face a higher risk of exposure to violent or extremist content. At the same time, despite children's awareness of these risks, most rely on themselves to handle them, with limited requests for support from family, school, or specialized authorities. This underscores the importance of developing a protection system that is closer and more responsive, built on trust, dialogue, and empowering children to ask for help when needed.

The impacts of these risks are not limited to the digital experience alone; they may extend to affect children's mental health, sense of safety, self-confidence, social relationships, and academic achievement, and may also reflect on their behavior and interaction within society. Hence, digital safety is not an isolated issue from reality, but an extension of the child protection framework and building safer, more inclusive communities.

Based on these results, Generations For Peace did not stop at producing knowledge and diagnosing challenges, but sought to transform research evidence and findings into concrete practical steps by launching a national advocacy campaign titled "Protecting Children from Risks in Electronic Gaming Environments in Jordan." The campaign focuses on raising awareness about digital risks, enhancing protection and reporting mechanisms, supporting coordination among various relevant entities, and consolidating accountability principles, thereby contributing to providing a safer and more inclusive digital environment for children.

It is important to emphasize that the challenge does not lie in electronic games themselves; they represent a promising space for learning, skill development, promoting creativity, building relationships, and positive interaction. Rather, the challenge lies in ensuring safe digital environments that enable children to benefit from these opportunities without exposure to abuse, exploitation, or harm.

Protecting children in the digital world is a shared responsibility requiring joint efforts from all parties; it cannot fall on a single entity. Families, schools, civil society organizations, the Public Security Directorate, ministries, and government institutions, alongside electronic gaming companies and platforms, are essential parties in building an integrated protection system that responds to evolving digital challenges. At the same time, children alone should not bear the responsibility of handling risks that sometimes exceed their capacities and experiences; rather, they must be empowered and provided with necessary support and protection.

Investing in children's safety in cyberspace is an investment in our society's security and our generations' future. By unifying efforts, developing evidence-based policies, and strengthening protection and support channels, we can ensure that electronic games remain a space for creativity, learning, and positive communication, rather than becoming a source of danger.

Child protection begins with understanding their reality; in our world today, a large part of this reality has become digital, making child protection in cyberspace a responsibility that tolerates no delay.

Eighty Years of Crossing Toward Immortality

The Narrative of an Unbending Homeland

Eighty years have passed since the independence of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan, and Jordan continues to pose an exceptional question to the world, essential in its core and profound in its meaning: How has this nation managed to remain lofty, steadfast, and firm in a time when states collapsed, maps altered, projects crumbled, and balances of power shifted? How was Jordan able to turn challenges into opportunities, crises into stations of strength, and limited geography into a vast space of influence, presence, and respect?

The answer does not lie in abundance of resources or vastness of geography, but in Jordan possessing its own national narrative—that narrative formed from an ancient history, a noble message, a wise leadership, and a people believing in their homeland. Jordan has always been a renewed cultural and human project, deriving its strength from its deep-rooted Hashemite roots, its Arab and Islamic heritage, and its absolute belief that the human being is the true wealth, and the nation is an immortal idea before being borders and geography.

May 25, 1946, marked a decisive historical turning point in the march of the modern Jordanian state, when the independence of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan was declared under the leadership of the Founding King, the Martyr Abdullah I ibn Al Hussein—may God rest his soul. Jordanians thus began the journey of building a state that was not merely an emerging political entity, but a comprehensive renaissance project carrying from its first moments the message of moderation, dignity, Arabism, and humanity.

Since that day, Jordan was not a state seeking a place on the world map, but a homeland forging its standing through the will of its leadership and people. Across eight decades, Hashemite leadership succeeded in carrying the historical trust, acting as an impregnable fortress, a steady compass, and the most prominent address for wisdom, moderation, and stability.

The Founding King Abdullah I established the rules of the modern state, and after him His Majesty King Talal bin

Abdullah—may God rest his soul—carried the message of the Constitution and institutions. Then came the Builder, His Majesty King Hussein bin Talal—may God rest his soul—to create a national epic spanning decades, establishing a unique Jordanian school in leadership, wisdom, patience, and achievement, until Jordan during his reign became a global model for a state defeating challenges through will and determination.

Today, His Majesty King Abdullah II ibn Al Hussein—may God protect and preserve him—leads the march of the Jordanian state with the confidence of a leader, the wisdom of a Hashemite, and the insight of a statesman who realizes that the strength of nations is not measured by the size of their resources, but by their ability to build human beings, develop institutions, and shape the future. Since assuming his constitutional powers, His Majesty worked to consolidate the state of law and institutions, enhance political participation, empower youth and women, open up to the knowledge economy, and build a modern Jordanian model capable of facing the challenges of the era and turning them into opportunities for growth and progress.

Under this wise Royal vision came the Jordanian National Narrative project, which enjoys the attention and patronage of His Royal Highness Crown Prince Al Hussein bin Abdullah II, forming a pivotal milestone in the journey of Jordanian national awareness. This project aims not only to document history, but to build a unifying national narrative invoking an extended cultural legacy across thousands of years, addressing new generations in the language of the era and tools of the future, thereby enhancing belonging, immunizing national identity, and linking Jordan's glorious present with its ancient past and promising future.

Over eighty years of independence, Jordan has proven that it is not an ordinary state in a turbulent region, but a political, cultural, and human miracle that managed to maintain its stability, unity, and national identity despite the crises, wars, and conflicts witnessed in the region. That was not a coincidence, but the fruit of wise leadership, firm institutions, a brave Arab Mustafa Army, professional security agencies, and an authentic Jordanian people who believed in their nation, defended it, and offered sacrifices for its sake.

The Arab Army and Jordanian security agencies were not merely institutions maintaining security and protecting borders, but were and remain symbols of honor, dignity, and professionalism, an impregnable wall against chaos, extremism, and terrorism, and a symbol of sacrifice and redemption. Every day they write new pages of Jordanian glory, confirming that the security and stability enjoyed by Jordan are a great national achievement deserving pride and honor.

Throughout the journey of independence, Jordanians have proven that they are true partners in making achievements; the teacher who builds minds, the doctor who saves lives, the engineer who develops the land, the soldier who guards borders, and the security officer who preserves stability all together form the panel of the beautiful Jordanian homeland, embodying the true meaning of belonging, loyalty, and sincerity.

Eighty years of independence is not just a number in the memory of time, but a story of struggle and giving, a narrative of a nation believing in its message, holding fast to its identity, facing challenges with an unyielding will, and continuing its march with confidence, pride, and glory. It represents eighty years of glory, wisdom, building, and loyalty to the eternal Hashemite message.

Today, as we celebrate the eightieth Independence Day, we do not celebrate the past only, but renew our pledge to the homeland, emphasizing our absolute faith that Jordan will remain under its wise Hashemite leadership, loyal people, Mustafa Army, and valiant security agencies a nation impervious to breaking, lofty as its mountains, proud as the dignity of its children, and advancing with confidence toward its second centennial.

May God preserve Jordan, preserve His Majesty King Abdullah II ibn Al Hussein and His Royal Highness Crown Prince Al Hussein bin Abdullah II, and perpetuate upon our dear homeland the blessings of security, stability, pride, and dignity. May Jordan, its Hashemite leadership, and its proud people be in good health every year.

Reflections on the Royal Vision
"Ideology Can Only Be Confronted with Ideology"

The Royal vision "Ideology can only be confronted with ideology" was not merely a phrase to be repeated, but formed a comprehensive national methodology in dealing with one of the most prominent challenges facing contemporary societies: protecting human beings from extremist and destructive ideas through building awareness, enhancing intellectual immunity, and consolidating values of moderation and belonging.

This vision aligned with the Jordanian approach established by the Amman Message, based on moderation, balance, respect for diversity, and dialogue. It confirms that true confrontation begins in the mind, and that building a conscious human being represents the foundation for protecting society and preserving its security and stability.

Based on this vision, the Public Security Directorate adopted a preventive approach focusing on enhancing intellectual security alongside its comprehensive security mission, realizing that protecting society is not limited to confronting crime in its various forms, but extends to building awareness, consolidating a culture of dialogue, and promoting values of citizenship and shared responsibility.

Translating this vision into practical reality, the Community Peace Center was established in 2015 to be the national umbrella unifying the efforts of the Public Security Directorate in fields of enhancing community peace, confronting extremism, hate speech, and digital recruitment, through institutional work and national partnerships with various state institutions, academic institutions, media, and civil society organizations.

The Center operates according to a vision that prevention begins before the emergence of threats, and that building awareness represents the true investment in society's security and stability. Therefore, the Center implements awareness and training programs targeting various age groups, addressing issues of intellectual security, safe use of cyberspace, enhancing critical thinking, and consolidating values of dialogue and acceptance of the other, contributing to building a more aware society capable of handling intellectual and digital variables.

With rapid developments in communication means, ideas no longer know geographical boundaries, and digital platforms have become an open environment where messages and concepts compete. This makes the responsibility of intellectual immunization a shared national responsibility, integrating roles of the family, educational institutions, media, religious institutions, security agencies, and civil society organizations to build awareness capable of distinction, dialogue, and responsible choice.

The opening of the Community Peace Center's new building in the Shafa Badran area on June 14, 2026, marked a new station in the Center's journey, reflecting the evolution of its national role, enhancing its capacity to build local and international partnerships, receive delegations and expertise, and develop awareness programs within a future vision including expanding by establishing branches for the Center in the north and south of the Kingdom, ensuring its message reaches various governorates.

The Jordanian experience has proven that sustainable security begins with building the human being, and that societies investing in awareness, dialogue, and knowledge are more capable of facing intellectual challenges and more cohesive in the face of variables. From here, the Community Peace Center continues fulfilling its national mission, inspired by the noble Royal vision "Ideology can only be confronted with ideology," translating it into institutional work, qualitative programs, and effective partnerships that contribute to enhancing intellectual security and consolidating community peace, reaching a more aware, cohesive society capable of creating a safe and stable future.

" When vision turns into institutional work, awareness becomes the nation's first line of defense ."

A Journey of Achievements from Behind the Scenes

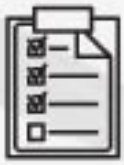

1- How Is the Media Message Crafted ?

- Behind every image published across the Center's digital platforms, every news item reaching the public, and every awareness message achieving its impact stands an integrated work system starting with an idea and ending with measuring impact.

  In the Media and Public Relations Department, nothing is left to chance; rather, the media message passes through precise stages ensuring it is professional, reliable, and capable of reaching the target audience.

2- From the Idea, the Story Begins :

- The work journey starts by monitoring developments and activities, analyzing priorities, and proposing ideas during team meetings, where core messages, target audiences, and the most suitable media angles are discussed to ensure content reflects the Center's message and keeps pace with media scene developments.

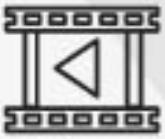

3- Content Creation :

- After approving the idea, the content preparation and drafting phase begins in professional language combining accuracy and clarity, considering institutional identity, and transforming information into impactful messages that raise awareness and achieve communication goals.

4- Documenting the Moment :

- The team moves to the field to document events and activities with photos and video, given that the image has become an essential part of the media message and a witness documenting the achievements delivered by the Center's work team.

5- From Raw Material to Visual Story :

- Visual materials undergo editing and design, producing integrated visual content that respects quality and visual identity, presenting the message attractively suitable for various media and digital platforms.

6- Reaching the Audience :

- Upon completing production, the publishing process across digital platforms is managed according to a studied media plan considering publication timing, the nature of each platform, and the target group, contributing to enhancing reach and achieving the highest engagement rates.

7- Impact Measurement and Continuous Development :

- The media message's journey does not end with its publication; rather, a new phase begins represented in analyzing performance indicators, measuring engagement, studying content impact, and drawing results that contribute to developing performance and crafting more impactful media messages in the future.

Media work is not merely transferring information, but an integrated process built on planning, creativity, and teamwork, aimed at producing meaningful messages that raise community awareness and embody the Community Peace Center's mission in serving the nation and society.

Awareness in the Digital Age

Between Content Speed and Depth of Perception

Major
Mohammad Suleiman Al-Rabihat
Head of Counter-Extremism Department

The world today witnesses a rapid shift in patterns of interaction with digital content, where speed has become a key element in user experience, and moving between information occurs in brief moments through what is known as "fast browsing" or skipping content behavior.

In this context, what can be termed the "skip button" emerges as a digital behavior reflecting the nature of the new relationship between human beings and information, where interaction is no longer based solely on careful reading, but on rapid selection of what catches attention in its initial moment.

This shift is not necessarily negative, but invites us to a deeper understanding of how awareness takes shape in modern digital environments, and how repetition, speed of exposure to content, and digital display mechanisms can contribute to building perceptions and attitudes gradually and indirectly.

Perhaps one of the most prominent features of the digital age is that content is no longer displayed to everyone in the same manner, but is presented to each user according to their interests and digital behaviors, Algorithms managing digital platforms analyze interaction patterns to deliver content matching user interests and preferences, giving them a more personalized experience, but at the same time potentially limiting diversity of knowledge sources and reducing opportunities to view different perspectives, This necessitates greater awareness of how these platforms operate and their impact on shaping convictions.

From this standpoint comes the importance of enhancing the concept of digital immunity, which does not mean staying away from technology, but possessing skills enabling individuals to handle it with awareness and responsibility through critical thinking, information verification, and understanding platform operation mechanisms. This helps build balanced interaction with content, preserving the capacity for analysis and understanding amidst the rapid flow of information.
Digital transformation has not only made individuals consumers of content, but granted them the ability to be creators of it. Today, anyone can publish an idea, photo, or video clip reaching thousands of people within moments, making digital responsibility an essential part of citizenship culture. Everything published in cyberspace leaves an impact, and may contribute to spreading knowledge and promoting values of respect and tolerance, or lead to recirculating misleading information or content that weakens trust and affects social cohesion.

For this reason, building digital awareness is not linked to possessing information alone, but to the ability to understand and analyze it, distinguishing between fact and opinion, and between reliable news and directed content, these skills represent one of the most important pillars of intellectual immunity in modern times.

Understanding these transformations contributes to developing community awareness methods, focus is no longer on presented messages alone, but also on how they are received, the way they are interacted with, and their ability to build sustainable awareness promoting balanced thinking and responsible decision-making.

Based on its national mission, the Community Peace Center works to consolidate this preventive approach through implementing awareness and training programs, building partnerships with various institutions, promoting a culture of dialogue, developing critical thinking, and empowering various societal groups with analysis and distinction tools. This aligns with digital age requirements and renewed challenges, contributing to enhancing intellectual security and consolidating community peace.

In light of this, the most important question today becomes not: What is the individual watching? But rather: How do they interact with what they watch? And how do they distinguish between content that enriches knowledge and that which seeks to influence perception or direct behavior?

Answering these questions represents a key entry point to building a more conscious society capable of achieving balance between the era's speed and depth of perception, making technology a tool for knowledge and construction, rather than a means for unconscious influence. Digital awareness is no longer an option, but a necessity to protect the individual, enhance social cohesion, and forge a future built on knowledge and responsibility, cementing community peace values as a foundation for security, stability, and development.

Campus Violence

A Proactive Approach to Understanding and Mitigating Risks

Universities are knowledge and social spaces playing a pivotal role in building human capital and promoting values of citizenship, dialogue, and tolerance. However, the phenomenon of campus violence has become a growing challenge forcing academic institutions to reconsider prevention and response mechanisms, based on scientific understanding that transcends reductionist explanations linking violence to passing individual behavior or an isolated incident.

From a crisis and risk management perspective, campus violence is not viewed as a standalone crisis in all cases, but as a behavioral and social problem involving latent institutional risks that may evolve into a real crisis if early warning indicators are ignored or containment and intervention mechanisms fail.

Understanding campus violence requires acknowledging that its causes are multiple and intertwined, and cannot be attributed to a single factor. There are social factors represented in transferring patterns of societal conflict and division into the university environment, including narrow fanatical ties and negative perceptions associated with identity and belonging. Certain family and educational practices based on violence or exclusion also contribute to consolidating aggressive behavioral patterns among youth.

On the psychological level, academic and economic pressures, feelings of frustration or marginalization, and weak emotion management and conflict resolution skills may increase the likelihood of engaging in violent behaviors. These risks increase amidst limited psychological support services and student counseling. At the institutional level, certain organizational imbalances may contribute to exacerbating the phenomenon, such as the absence of clear preventive policies, weak communication channels between students and university administration, limited student participation in decision-making, and lack of effective mechanisms to monitor early indicators of risky behaviors.

The growing role of social media in fueling conflicts and expanding their scope cannot be overlooked, as digital platforms have become parallel environments where disputes take shape and escalate before transferring to campus in the form of violent practices or hate speech threatening social cohesion within the university.

Risk management literature indicates that dealing effectively with campus violence requires shifting from a post-incident response methodology to a prevention and anticipation methodology. Universities are required to adopt an institutional framework for managing violence risks, starting with identifying risk sources, analyzing occurrence probabilities and potential impacts, leading to setting integrated plans to mitigate risks and enhance institutional readiness.

In this context, the importance of building early warning systems relying on monitoring behavioral and social indicators emerges, alongside developing databases that assist in analyzing trends and identifying groups most vulnerable to risks. Psychological and social counseling units should also be activated and supplied with necessary human and material resources to fulfill their preventive and therapeutic roles.

It is also essential to promote a culture of dialogue, tolerance, and acceptance of the other by integrating these values into extracurricular activities and educational programs, and developing students' skills in effective communication, dispute management, negotiation, and peaceful conflict resolution.

Furthermore, engaging students in decision-making and expanding spaces for volunteer work and student initiatives contribute to enhancing a sense of belonging and responsibility, reducing feelings of exclusion and alienation that may form a fertile environment for violence.

Universities' success in mitigating violence is not measured solely by their ability to contain emergency incidents, but by their ability to build a safe educational environment capable of anticipating risks and handling them efficiently. Campus violence is not an inevitable fate, but a phenomenon manageable, understandable, and preventable whenever institutional will and strategic vision based on crisis and risk management principles are available.

The Opening of
the Community Peace Center
Message and Vision

Journalist Ahmad Al-Hourani
Public Relations Department
Yarmouk University

The message of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan in achieving community peace relies on firm constants from Islamic Sharia and authentic Arab values, aiming to build a cohesive, vibrant society proud of its national identity and rejecting all forms of extremism, thereby enhancing values of tolerance and coexistence within its diverse social fabric.

The opening of the Community Peace Center under , under the gracious patronage of Director of Public Security Major General Obeidallah Al-Maaytah, indicates a serious desire to execute state and Royal directives and visions in continuous work to confront hate speech, wars, incitement, violence, and extremism in its various forms and types, immunizing our daughters and sons to confront such destructive ideas, and promoting a culture of accepting the other as a common denominator for differences of various types and forms.

Jordan, under the leadership of His Majesty King Abdullah II, was present and strongly influential in confronting those calling for hatred in the name of Islam to distort the legacy and teachings of our great religion. Whether hate speech and violence stem from khawarij of Islam or from extremists fueling hatred against Islam, it constitutes—according to His Majesty's vision—a danger and threat to all humanity. In memory, and within the framework of continuing international efforts to combat terrorism and extremism in all its forms, His Majesty participated in the "Christchurch Call" summit on May 14, 2021, to counter online extremism and hate speech, noting that the lack of justice and absence of a political horizon fuel the fires of extremism, as terrorists exploit grievances to win supporters to their ranks, alongside his participation in the "Cohesive Societies" conference.
In Singapore, in June 2019, where he emphasized that Attacking on interfaith harmony, mutual respect, and trust represent the greatest threat facing the world, requiring everyone to confront it and resist hatred and exclusion.

Clear efforts are being carried out by the Community Peace Center to achieve harmony, peace, security, and stability in society within practical programs, sustainable initiatives, and creative ideas confronting hate speech and curbing the spread of violence, which has become a phenomenon driven by social media platforms and technical programs. Positive dialogue, honesty, and objectivity stand opposite lies, deception, bullying, and verbal and moral violence of all kinds.

Confronting destructive and extremist ideas in establishing values of moderation, and combating extremism and takfir intellectually and security-wise, is a firm Jordanian approach based on a comprehensive Hashemite vision aimed at immunizing minds, especially youth, through effective institutional strategies enhancing belonging and the comprehensive modernization drive. All of this is a great effort carried out by the Community Peace Center with confidence and competence.

The Media Studio

The Center's Media Window

Based on the Community Peace Center's approach built on excellence and continuous development, and its keenness to keep pace with rapid changes in technical, digital, and media fields, the media axis was designated as a fundamental pillar in the Center's work system, realizing the pivotal role modern media plays in shaping awareness and enhancing the community peace system.

To execute this axis according to the highest standards, it was necessary to provide an integrated media environment equipped with the latest technologies and tools keeping pace with rapid developments in media content creation.

Hence came the establishment of the Media Studio for the Community Peace Center to serve as a specialized platform for producing and creating media content in various forms, serving the Center's message and goals.

The studio produces media content promoting community peace values and consolidating positive meanings, alongside preparing awareness content countering extremism and hate speech, and addressing issues that may affect the community peace system, through a specialized team of media professionals and technicians capable of producing professional content matching best media practices.

The studio has contributed to producing many programs and media materials, most notably the program "A Thought on Peace," the podcast "Fikra" (An Idea), and a collection of short awareness and national reels, in addition to numerous videos and digital materials targeting various societal groups according to the characteristics of each group and their patterns of media and social platform usage.

The Community Peace Center continues to develop its media tools and invest in the latest technologies and digital means, ensuring its national message is delivered in an impactful style, with professional content, and greater capacity to reach the audience and enhance community awareness.

Correct Your Thought

Extremism

and Intellectual Immunization

In the name of God, the Most Gracious, the Most Merciful. Praise be to God, Lord of the Worlds, and peace and blessings be upon the most honorable of creation and messengers, our master Muhammad, and upon his family and companions all together...

In an era where ideas accelerate and sources of influence multiply, intellectual immunization has become an educational and societal necessity, no less important than any other type of protection. An unimmunized mind may be vulnerable to drifting behind extremism or laxity, both of which are deviations from the path of moderation upon which Islamic Sharia was built. Hence comes the discussion on extremism as a deviation from moderation, and on intellectual immunization as the safety wall protecting human beings from deviation in understanding and behavior.

Extremism is exceeding the limit of moderation in thought or behavior, and a tendency toward harshness or looseness at the expense of balance. Islam warned against extremism in religion, because extremism leads to narrowing what God has made spacious, and leads to flawed rulings or harsh stances that harm the essence of Sharia, God Almighty said: People of the Scripture, do not exceed limits in your religion [An-Nisa: 171].

And the Prophet said: "Beware of extremism in religion, for those before you were destroyed only by extremism in religion" (Narrated by An-Nasa'i).

Extremism is a cause of intellectual and behavioral destruction, because it closes the door to balanced understanding and weakens the ability to perceive Sharia objectives built on mercy, justice, and ease.

Therefore, Islam brought a balanced methodology balancing spirit and matter, mind and revelation, rights and duties. Moderation is not negligence in religion, but adherence to Sharia guidance away from excess and negligence.

God Almighty said: And thus we have made you a just/balanced community [Al-Baqarah: 143], Contemplating the biography of the Prophet reveals a practical model of balance; he was the most devout person to God, yet he forbade harshness that exhausts the soul or prevents continuity, guiding us toward intellectual immunization in many of his sayings and actions.

Intellectual immunization is building firm awareness based on correct knowledge, balanced understanding, and the ability to distinguish between truth and falsehood. The Holy Quran guided toward the importance of verification and not being dragged behind every idea without scrutiny.

God Almighty said: So ask the people of the message if you do not know [An-Nahl: 43].

And Almighty God said: you who have believed, if there comes to you a disobedient person with information, investigate [Al-Hujurat: 6].

This indicates that Islam calls for conscious thinking and not accepting ideas without proof or verification, forming a critical mindset capable of confronting doubts.

Intellectual immunization can be built through a set of clear foundations, including:

-Correct Sharia Knowledge:

Knowledge dispels ignorance and prevents falling into misunderstanding of texts.

God Almighty said: Say, "Are those who know equal to those who do not know?" [Az-Zumar: 9].

- Developing Critical Thinking Skills:

So that the individual learns to analyze ideas, distinguish between argument and doubt, and avoid being led behind emotional discourse.

- Awareness of Sharia Objectives:

Sharia is built on preserving religion, life, mind, wealth, and honor, and any thought leading to harming these objectives is a deviant thought.

- Creating an Educational Environment Supportive of Dialogue:

Calm dialogue opens horizons of understanding and prevents closure that may lead to fanaticism.

Intellectual immunization is a shared responsibility requiring integration of efforts between the individual, family, and educational institutions. With knowledge, awareness, and adherence to the methodology of moderation, society can protect its children from intellectual deviation, building a conscious generation combining strength of faith with soundness of thinking.

The religion of Islam is a religion of mercy and moderation, calling for thinking and contemplation, warning against extremism and harshness, so that human beings remain balanced in thought and behavior, steadfast on truth without excess or negligence.
